#CaveTwitter initiates you into the mysteries of the CINNABAR PATH ~

urcC Research Notes: Cinnabar

While tunneling deep into Kave Theory, the urrC stumbled across the following synchronicity machine:

AQ282 =
ACCELERATIONISM =
FIELDS OF CINNABAR =
TANTRIC CINNABAR

AQ134 = CINNABAR =
UNITY

That “cinnabar” decodes to “unity” is no great surprise, given the role attributed to the substance – a bright red, toxic mercury sulfide – in both Western and Eastern alchemy.

Who KNOWS where this cinnabar path (or tunnel?) will lead us!
Change it a bit and 243 = CINNABAR FIELDS = ALREADY INSIDE

Nick must join the cinnabar quest. Tantric cinnabar = 282 = accelerationism

"untag me from this demented cave nonsense," nick screams, but it's too late, the walls are hardening into gleaming red-black cinnabar found a scientist who did experiments injecting cinnabar into dog's spinal cords:

(b), our previous waking thoughts, dispositions and prevalent states of mind." H. Quincke (Physiology of the Cerebro-spinal Fluid, Reichert's Archives, 1872, p. 158) injected an emulsion of cinnabar into the subarachnoid space of the spinal cord in the region of the first lumbar vertebra of the dog. After the lapse of a period, varying in different instances from one week to three months, he found the cinnabar in the subarachnoid tissue and pia of the brain as well as the spinal cord. In ten out of twelve cases it was much accumulated at the base of the brain. It was found around all the cranial and spinal nerves, especially where they pierce the dura mater. In a number of cases it extended for some distance along the nerves—especially in the case of the optic, where it penetrated as far as the eye-ball. It was also found in the cervical lymph glands. It was not found in the proper substance of either the brain or spinal cord. In a second series of experiments the cinnabar emulsion was injected into the special arachnoid cavity of the cranium. In a few days it had largely disappeared from this, and was found in the subarachnoid spaces and pia of the brain exactly as after direct injection into these parts. It was also found in the spinal canal. From these experiments Quincke concludes, 1, that there is a connection between the subarachnoid spaces of the brain and spinal cord. 2. During life there is a current in the subarachnoid fluid from behind forwards as well as in an opposite direction (the pigment passed in both directions). He thinks that the respiratory motions of the subarachnoid fluid (Magendie) are the most probable cause of the diffusion of the precipitated particles of the cinnabar. 3. The passage of the cinnabar from the arachnoid cavity of the brain into the subarachnoid spaces of brain and cord shows that these parts communicate. 4. The apertures of exit for the cerebro-spinal fluid appear to be indicated by these experiments. There seem to be channels in connection with the nerves through which the fluid escapes. This appears to be the explanation of the presence of free cinnabar particles and also of lymph corpuscles containing cinnabar in these situations. The pacchionian bodies appear also to be places of exit. These were strongly pigmented. The cinnabar was never found in the central canal of the spinal cord, the "perivascular spaces" of brain or cord, the lymph-vessels of the olfactory membrane, in Tenon's space or the perichoroidal space, which, according to the injection experiments of Key, Retzius and Schwalbe, communicate with the arachnoid space. Quincke concludes that normally these parts discharge their fluid into the subarachnoid space, and receive nothing from this.

I'm slowly beginning to see the merits of accelerationism

To be honest there's a Jehu shrine with candles and incense over at the #RhettTwitter HQ

To the accusation that Land is a Right accelerationist, he argues there is no such thing a Right accelerationism.

JEHU

That sounds right to me and his reasons are sound. On the other hand, the notion of a Left accelerationism is entirely incoherent.

There is only Land's accelerationism. Anything else is complete bullshit.

But, that being said, the term accelerationism can be dropped as well, since we are only talking about the logic of capital. The logic of capital is the only thing at work here. Not a Right logic or a Left logic, just capital. Those who claim to hold to Left accelerationism are more than likely just Leftists, i.e., classical fascists. But even with Leftists, I have shown that their default political position is neoliberalism, that is capital. It's capital all the way down.

A very uncomfortable position to be in. The problem of being unable to escape capitalism was not peculiar to "actually existing socialism." In the end, the SU only arrived at a fully developed capitalist regime. Then it collapsed.

If the Soviet Union couldn't escape capitalism, despite total control of the national capital, how is the Left supposed to do it?

We can prettify this by attaching label to what we do -- Left, Right, Acceleration, Exit, etc. -- but in all likelihood we have to pass thru capital's bowels to get where we want to go.

People need to get out of their heads this idea they can escape capitalism -- it ain't happening..

History of #CaveTwitter

Table 1: Major milestones that will be covered in this paper
Year	Contributer	Contribution
300 BC	Aristotle	introduced Associationism, started the history of human's attempt to understand brain.
1873	Alexander Bain	introduced Neural Groupings as the earliest models of neural network, inspired Hebbian Learning Rule.
1943	McCulloch & Pitts	introduced MCP Model, which is considered as the ancestor of Artificial Neural Model.
1949	Donald Hebb	considered as the father of neural networks, introduced Hebbian Learning Rule, which lays the foundation of modern neural network.
1958	Frank Rosenblatt	introduced the first perceptron, which highly resembles modern perceptron.
1974	Paul Werbos	introduced Backpropagation
1980	Teuvo Kohonen	introduced Self Organizing Map
	Kunihiko Fukushima	introduced Neocogitron, which inspired Convolutional Neural Network
1982	John Hopfield	introduced Hopfield Network
1985	Hilton & Sejnowski	introduced Boltzmann Machine
1986	Paul Smolensky	introduced Harmonium, which is later known as Restricted Boltzmann Machine
	Michael I. Jordan	defined and introduced Recurrent Neural Network
1990	Yann LeCun	introduced LeNet, showed the possibility of deep neural networks in practice
1997	Schuster & Paliwal	introduced Bidirectional Recurrent Neural Network
	Hochreiter & Schmidhuber	introduced LSTM, solved the problem of vanishing gradient in recurrent neural networks
2006	Geoffrey Hinton	introduced Deep Belief Networks, also introduced layer-wise pretraining technique, opened current deep learning era.
2009	Salakhutdinov & Hinton	introduced Deep Boltzmann Machines
2012	Geoffrey Hinton	introduced Dropout, an efficient way of training neural networks

Richard Sharpe Shaver was born in Pennsylvania in 1910. When he was seven an accident damaged his spine and stunted his growth. He became an avid SF reader, then a welder and a paranoid schizophrenic who believed his welding guns allowed him to hear the thoughts of his fellow workers “by some freak of its coil’s field attunements”. He also picked up telepathic torture sessions conducted by malevolent aliens deep inside the earth.

Shaver left his job, became a tramp and was hospitalised. For the next eight years he was in a mental institution and not, as he insisted, “in the Cavern World”. This was the secret prehistoric landscape within our planet whose inhabitants, the Deros, sometimes popped out to kidnap surface-dwellers to sado-masochistically torture and devour them.

Wait, come back! From here the story gets stranger. In 1943 Shaver wrote a letter to Amazing Stories magazine, explaining that he had learned “Mantong”, the Deros language. The magazine’s editor, Ray Palmer, tried translating phrases. He was no fool; he’d bought Isaac Asimov’s first stories and knew a mad thing when he saw it. Palmer replied with a request: “What else have you got?” Shaver sent back the whole story of his capture and torture, which Palmer tidied up and published in 1945 as “I Remember Lemuria”.

The resulting publication caught both of them by surprise. Sales of the magazine went through the roof and thousands wrote in wanting more, which Shaver happily supplied. The Hollow Earth theory took off around the world; in other countries readers claimed to be able to access the caves from tunnels and elevators. “Shaver Mystery Clubs” were formed. Amazing Stories became devoted almost exclusively to Shaver tales. Inevitably, the stories were mixed with UFO sightings.

Shaver stayed in the limelight with accounts of “rock books” – stones that contained alien recordings. He even mailed readers slices of agate from his alien rock “lending library”. His influence was enormous and long-lasting, from concert posters to toy lines, and stunning artwork produced for Amazing Stories. So, was Shaver exploited, or simply allowed to flourish? ●

In J. G. Ballard's short story "The Gioconda of the Twilight Noon," the protagonist retreats to a house by the sea to recover his sight after falling ill. His temporary blindness heightens his other senses. From within, dream images well up. Soon, they seem more real to him than reality; obsessively, he gives himself over to them. Time and again, he summons forth the mysterious coastal landscape with its blue cliffs. In his mind's eye, he clammers down rock stairs to a cave. There he meets a mysterious sorceress, the embodiment of his desire. After a beam of light strikes his eye as his bandages are being changed, he comes to believe that it has burned away his fantastic visions. His sight returns, but the dream images do not. Filled with despair, he resolves to destroy his eyes in order to see more. His scream of pain is also a joyous ejaculation:

Quickly Maitland pushed back the branches of the willows and walked down on to the bank. A moment later, Judith heard his shout above the cries of the gulls. The sound came half in pain and half in triumph, and she ran down to the trees uncertain whether he had injured himself or discovered something pleasing. Then she saw him standing on the bank, his head raised to the sunlight, the bright carmine on his cheeks and hands, an eager, unrepentant Oedipus.¹¹ daylight in which we can catch a glimpse of the sun?"¹² Žižek mistakenly claims that Maitland stares into the sun hoping "to view the scene in its entirety."¹³ In truth, however, Maitland is following an anti-Platonic dispositive. By destroying his eyes, he has made bold to withdraw from the world of truth and hypervisibility, to retreat into the cave—a twilight space of dreams and desire.
